SUPPLEMENTAL PROHIBITION LEGISLATION

Early in the campaign it did not appear possible to secure any supplemental prohibition legislation. It hardly seemed probable that such a degree of enthusiasm could be aroused as that which carried the amendment through two years ago. As a matter of fact, there is not now and will not be, such a popular enthusiasm, but there is a great deal more quiet thinking.

The campaign two years ago was rather a "hurrah" affair in which sentiment played the larger part. It was directed mainly against the evil of the saloon. The business end of the controversy was given minor consideration by the advocates of prohibition. The business men, as a rule, believed that prohibition would not be a good thing for the state. Many were openly against it and many were apathetic.

The situation is quite different now. Practically every large corporation in the state is lending substantial encouragement to the temperance workers. The head of a Yuma enterprise whose business would be greatly benefitted under a saloon regime and who two years ago was a worker against prohibition, is now a contributor to the temperance workers' fund.

The moral issue in this controversy has ceased to be an issue. That is a matter already disposed of. There is though a rather one-sided moral question involved—the right of or opportunity of the bootlegger to do business in this state. But the opponents of prohibition refrain from discussing that.

THE FEDERAL LAW ON UNLABELED CANNED GOODS

The Department of Agriculture has been requested to define its position with respect to the application of the Net Weight Amendment to the Federal Food and Drugs Act to the transportation in interstate commerce of unlabeled canned goods. A modification of a former opinion, issued May 12, 1916, has been asked for and, upon reconsideration, the department has issued the following announcement: "Until further notice, the department will not recommend proceedings under the Food and Drugs Act on account of the shipment in interstate commerce, or the sale in the District of Columbia or the Territories, of unlabeled canned foods solely upon the ground that the same do not bear a statement of the quantity of the contents, if such shipment or sale be other than to a retail dealer or to a consumer and the cans bear a correct statement of the quantity of the contents when sold or delivered to retail dealers and consumers. If investigation discloses that failure to mark the quantity of the contents on unlabeled cans affords means to defraud or to defeat the purposes of the act, it will be the duty of the department to recommend proceedings, and reasonable notice to that effect will be given."

THE PEN IS MIGHTY HERE IS ONE EXAMPLE

Says "Jimmy the Office Boy": "Ink is what links the gink with his think."

There is a general impression to the effect that the pen is mighty.

Consider, then, the humiliating state to which has sunk the Yuma postoffice pen! Has any one ever seen a postoffice pen that didn't look as though it had begun to grow a little coat of fur. And that wasn't encrusted thickly with inky barnacles? And that didn't trail its own particular little set of ink-dripping whiskers across the maiden whiteness of an unspooled page?

To be sure, the postoffice pen isn't used for correspondence, but emergencies do arise. Occasionally one must address an envelope on the slant postoffice desk. What a doleful and dreary tangle of hen's tracks is the result! Be you ever so proud of your handwriting, it would need but the veriest tyro in character reading to identify you as a crook, a thief, a thug, and a potential murderer.

It may be that these pens are heirlooms and that the Postoffice Department had just cause for being proud of them. But in this event, wouldn't it be more fitting to have them kept in little glass cases, hat they might be gazed and wondered at by the populace? Otherwise, pens are not very expensive, and the work of taking the old one from the holder—unless, indeed, it be rusted, there through long and weary years—is the work only of a second. Why can't some postoffice employe be decorated with the title of Master of Pens, and make it his duty to see that the postoffice pen becomes the straight and shining little arrow of truth that it was meant to be?

YOUTH CHARGED WITH DEATH OF FAMILY AGAIN ARRESTED

ALPINE, Tex., Sept. 1.—Information has been received here that Bernard L. Sherman, the young man who, it was charged, killed the Lemon family in the lower part of this county in 1914, and who was returned to his home in Illinois because he was declared a moral degenerate, is now charged with killing a man in Illinois. A dispatch from Princeton, Ill., says Sherman has been arrested following the murder of a taxicab driver named Joe Derix and that Sherman admitted killing the man "during a spell."

will soon adjust themselves so that the usual Sunday features may be restored, but at present the production of news print is at its maximum and there is no surplus stock on hand. Painstaking investigation of the paper market has shown there is no hope of supplying the increased demand, inevitable with the coming of the winter season, save by an immediate reduction in the number of the pages printed.

The first intimation that Americans had of the Kaiser's dislike of them was when he sent to this country a consignment of German carp.—New Orleans State.

Mention was made in these columns a day or two ago of the uncertainty of juries. It has just been illustrated by a jury at Nogales, Ariz., which, after six alienists had pronounced a man insane, at once brought in a verdict declaring him sane.

SAVED HER DAUGHTER'S LIFE

"Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy saved my daughter's life when she had cholera morbus at the age of fourteen months. She vomited every few minutes and we were unable to keep any medicine down long enough to benefit her until we gave her this remedy. The doctor being at our house, I asked him what he thought about our using it, and he said as he was unable to do the child any good, I had better use it. The second dose she kept down and in a short time the bowels were checked and she improved rapidly after that," writes Mrs. Jennie Moyer, Lima, O. Obtainable everywhere.
